

Ray Bell

Partner
Himformatics LLC

A founder of Himformatics, Ray Bell is a seasoned healthcare business and technology consulting partner who understands first-hand the challenges of today's healthcare market and how to use information technology (IT) to drive better outcomes. At ease working with all levels of an organization, Ray has managed a full range of services, including the IT component of business re-engineering and IT planning projects, outsourcing strategies, vendor selections, contract negotiations, implementation planning and installation.

Throughout his career, Ray has assisted health delivery organizations from small community-based entities to a multi-specialty academic physician practice to complex integrated delivery systems, including academic medical centers. He served as acting Chief Information Officer at several large systems, including an inter-city public teaching hospital and two regional integrated delivery systems. He also has worked with states to monitor and improve aspects of their healthcare reimbursement and fiscal systems.

Before Himformatics, Ray was with First Consulting Group (now CSC) and served as a national partner of Healthcare Information Systems for Deloitte. Prior to that, he was a senior executive for HBOC (now McKesson) where he designed and installed integrated healthcare information systems in more than 50 hospitals in the southeast, and designed and migrated into production most major financial and clinical applications.

As a consultant, Ray is adept at developing new business, building and managing large regional and national practices, identifying and creating new service offerings, and delivering strategic engagements. Ray earned his bachelor's degree in math and computer science from Iowa State University.

About Himformatics Himformatics harnesses IT and business expertise to help clients deliver healthcare in a way that makes a difference. From strategy to implementation, our select team of consultants specializes in getting the most value from IT to improve clinical processes and financial performance, and ensure regulatory compliance. Our expertise spans a range of comprehensive and specialized services for healthcare organizations big and small. We draw on our decades of experience to earn a place as a trusted adviser to your business, and we thrive on delivering exceptional service and results.

himformatics.com